ALLERGEN INFORMATION SHEETS

The Allergen Information Sheets are provided by individual ACDS members as a voluntary contribution in the interest of public education regarding the composition of allergen-containing substances, the products in which they may be found, and means by which they may be avoided. The Allergen Information Sheets have been received from sources believed to be reliable, but they have not been reviewed, edited, or approved by ACDS.

The information provided in the Allergen Information Sheets is not intended to be relied upon as medical or legal opinion, nor should it replace the considered judgment of a licensed professional with respect to particular patients, procedures, or practices. In addition, legal and medical standards can vary from one jurisdiction to another and are subject to change as new rules take effect and/or new information, materials, and methods become available. Thus, neither the ACDS nor individual contributors validate the accuracy or sufficiency of the information provided, nor do they make any warranty, guarantee, or other representation, express or implied, with respect to its fitness for any particular purpose.

ALLERGIC CONTACT DERMATITIS

Testing has shown that you have allergic contact dermatitis. This means that you are particularly sensitive to even extremely small amounts of these substances:

- Balsam of Peru
- BHA
- Dimethylaminopropylamine
- Fragrance
- Hydroquinone
- Nickel Sulfate
- Octyl Gallate
- Parabens

You are so sensitive to these substances that if your skin comes in contact just one time with any of them, you may develop a rash. Itching, pinkness, small bumps, or blisters may appear within 4 hours, but usually starts 1 to 3 days after exposure to the substance.

The skin reaction lasts from 2 to 8 weeks, even if you don't come into contact with the substance again.

If you have had many exposures over time, it may take 3 to 6 months for your skin to get completely better after you start avoiding the substances. During those months, your skin will slowly get better, but you will probably have multiple brief flare ups of your rash, even as it is overall improving. If you come in contact with one of the substances again during that time, that can cause a significant set-back in your recovery.

You were not sensitive to these substances for most of your life. Allergy develops from repeated exposure. You were exposed enough times to these substances that you became sensitive to them.

You must remember that just because you weren't sensitive to something in the past doesn't mean that you are not sensitive to it now. Your body has changed and is sensitive now to things that didn't cause you trouble before. You will be allergic to them for the rest of your life. You will always need to avoid them. It is very important to learn how you can avoid the substances that cause your allergic reaction.

USING THIS LIST

The products in this list are SAFE FOR YOU TO USE.

You must be aware that you need to get the exact products listed. Products that are the same brand and have a similar name as a product on the list are possibly NOT safe if they are not on the list.

Finally, even when you buy a product that is on the list, you should still look at the ingredients listed on the container to confirm it doesn't have any of the ingredients. This list is updated frequently, but it is still possible that a product could have changed since it was last updated or that a store is still selling an older version of the product that is different than the updated version in this list.

If there are products on this list that you are having trouble finding, you can find most products online at www.drugstore.com. If you can't find the product there, then try going to www.google.com and searching for the product.
